

FIRST STEPS

- ✓ Know the difference between a CV and a résumé and when it is appropriate to use one over the other.
- ✓ Keep a list of all your professional qualifications, activities, and experiences. This will help you when writing or updating your CV.

When and Why to Use a CV

- Apply for internships in academic or professional fields
- Promote yourself for employment opportunities, particularly in academic settings
- Inform employers about your achievements and activities for annual or tenure review
- Describe your areas of expertise when applying for independent consulting
- Support your application for fellowships, grants, or other contract funding proposals
- Provide information related to professional activities
- Introduce yourself when you make presentations at professional conferences
- Establish credibility when submitting a manuscript proposal to an academic journal or press

How Should I Dress Up My CV?

- Select appropriate sections from the content list to organize the information that presents your abilities, qualifications, and background effectively
- Present the information in succinct phrases, using action words
- Type your name and page number on each page (no page number is required on the first page).
- Be simple. Don't use an extensive mix of styles, such as many types of fonts.
- Be consistent. Use the same chronological order in presenting information, (if you present your work experiences from most recent to least recent, then use this same order of presentation for other data as well).
- Check for "double entries." No item should appear more than once in the CV.
- Check the CV for clarity, conciseness, completeness, consistency and currency.
- Make sure the CV is visually appealing and error-free.
- Print your CV on a high-quality and light-colored paper.
- Ask for feedback from experienced professionals, particularly those who are in similar positions as those who would be reading your CV.

Final Thoughts

- Update all your information in you CV regularly and accurately; you don't need to worry about how long your CV becomes.
- Your CV is not a substitute for a completed job application form. Never simply write "See CV" on the employer's application form because it may be considered an incomplete form.
- When attending job interviews, have copies of your CV with you. Providing a copy to each of the interviewers may facilitate interview questions and assures that each person is aware of your qualifications and experiences.
